WASHINGTON. A Ramble Through the Capitol from

Crypt to Dome. The Eastern Front-The Painted and Sculptured Ornaments of the Roinuda and the Old Representative

Hall-A Look from the Bome. Correspondence of the Uniou and American. WASHINGTON, Sept. 28 .- One of the prominent points of attraction in Washington is the Capitol, a huge pile which is variously criticised as a piece of architecture. Mad. de Stael once said that "architecture is frozen music," and some one, perhaps only a carping critic, says, if so, the Capitol may fairly be regarded as full of sweet notes sad'y "jangled and out of tune." However that may be, it presents many points of excellence to a green countryman, per-haps not so much in its make-up as in its adornments. It was intended when the location of the Capitol was fixed here, that the city should be built up East of the elevated plateau selected upon which to erect the building, but instead the visitor finds the city between the Capitol and the river on the West, spreading out over the low and what was at one time marshy or swampy ground. The original plan was to make the East the front proper, and so far as adornment is concerned, that plan has been carried out, while the western front, that toward the city, is comparatively plain. On either side of the eastern portico-the main entrance-are groups of statuary which will be sure to attract the attention of the visitor. On the left is a group by Persico, symbolical of the discovery of America. Columbus is encased in armor, said to have been copied even to the minutest details from a suit worn by him in his lifetime; is standing erect and holding a globe in his hand at a considerable elevation, while beside him croaches a nearly nude Indian woman, upon whose countenance is depicted the astonishment we may well suppose her people exhibited on see-ing the pale faces landing among them. On the right is a group by Greenough, said to symbolize civilization, but the point is certainly obscure. It is a very good representation of a scene in pioneer life, such as was of frequent occurrence in the early settlement of the country, and is yet occasionally witnessed on the Western frontier. A brawny Indian, in the act of tommahawking the wife of a pioneer, with a babe in her arms, is suddenly clasped from behind by the sturdy edventurer in the wake of civilization, who holds the arms of the savage in his iron grasp, rendering him powerless. Various ther sculptures adorn this front of the Capitol, and impart to it a very pleasing if not be sutiful effect. The celebrated bronze door, cast in Munich from designs made by Mr. Randolph Rogers in 1858, is placed in the main entrance. It was cast by F. Von Muller in 1861, weighs twenty thousand pounds, and is studded over with historic scenes of great interest to every American citizen. On the facings are figures typifying Europe, Africa, Asia and America.

Eight scenes in the life of Columbus are partrayed on the bronze shutters of the door, commencing with that to the Council of Salamanca for the discovery of the New World, down to his death-bed, the whole forming a suggestive history. The transome panel represents his formal landing on San Salvador and the exciting interest that event awakened. The door is further ornamented with the heads

Europe, and of royal personages, (which seems rather out of place on a door of the capital of a republic,) besides arms and instruments of science and war. THE BOTUNDA AND ITS PICTURES. The visitor is fascinated with the scene which is presented on entering the rotunda, and if he has a taste for the beautiful in art, is apt to linger long to drink in the glories which the pencil of the artist has created for his admiration. The dome, with all its airy grace and pictured beauty, towers above him one hundred and eighty feet, and the allegorical fresco of the dome, representing the arts of peace and war, of civilization and agriculture and commerce. is sure to elicit expressions of admiration of its conception and exand the lower portions of its vast walls are covered with historical paintings and sculptures, representing scenes familiar to every student of American history. Four of these paintings are by Col. John Trumbull, a son of stern old Jonathan Trumbull, who was Governor of Connecticut during the Revolution. These pictures represent re-Lenox was called to the Chair and G. L. spectively the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the surrender of Gen. and the last of the quantitie, representing the baptism of Pocahontas, is by Chapman. These pictures are all of great beauty, pow-erfully portraying the anxieties and passions excited by the scenes they rep and are said by connoiseurs to be of the highest artistic merit. It is a matter of pride that all these paintings of such pronounced excellenes are by American artists.

Some striking sculptures in relief are placed over the four entrances to the rotundar. That could be a striken to the country of the da. THE AMERICAN PANTHEON The old hall of the House of Representatives has been set apart as the American Pantheon. Under the act consecrating this hall to this use, each State in the Union is invited to contribute two statues of pror nent citizens of such State as may have distinguished themselves in civil military life. Two States have so far responded to this invitation. Connecticut has furnished statues of Roger Sherman and Jonathan Trum-hull, and Rhode Island, of Nathaniel Greene and Roger Williams. In this con-nection, it is related by a citizen of Wash-ington who happened in the hall one day recently, that a couple of countrymen were inspecting the counterfeit presentments of some of the great men of our country here. One appeared to have been here before and was acting the part of guide for the other, and when the latter was told who the representatives of Connecticut were he exclaimed: "Well, I wouldn't have thought they'd have gone and put old Trumbull in here, after he went and voted agin impeachin' Andy Johnson. Let's git!" There are in this hall a number of statues and busts of distinguished Americans, as well as a few busts of persons of foreign birth who identified themselves with the fortunes of this country in its earlier struggles. But perhaps the statue which attracts most attention is that of Lincoln by Vinnie Ream, more because it is t he work of a woman than anything else. It is a fine specimen of the sculptor's art, and some professional men go so far as to assert that a woman could not have executed it-that nobody but a first class artist could have done the work. But Vinnie declares the contrary; she "knows how it is herself," because she did the work, and the majority of visitors appear willing to ac-cept her word, thinking there may be some professional jealousy at the bottom of the adverse criticisms of rival artists of "the male persuasion."

WHAT IT HAS COST. What has been done by Congress to adorn and beautify the Capitol and other public places in Washington with painting and statuary, is stated and summarised by a gentleman of this city who has made himself familiar with the subject, as fol-

But we have devoted so much time to an aspection of the art decorations of the Capitol, that we must hurry through the Senate Chamber and the Representative Hall, and the committee rooms, and the other rooms devoted to a variety of purposes, each of which possesses some feature to call forth expressions of admiration. And now to the dome. The visitor who ascends to this elevated position, nearly two hundred feet above the plateau upon which the Capitol stands, will find spread out before him a magnificent panorama of the surrounding country. WAVERLY, TENN., Oct. 5, 1872 .- The Congressional contest for the State at large s at present, and from its inception has een, attracting more attention and receiving a larger share of the public notice than any other issue or question before the people of Humphreys county. Believing that here were others in the State of more egislative experiences and ability, and who could command more of the respect of Congress and the confidence of the people, and believing that it was a time when our best and ablest statesmen should be called out and elected to the Congress of the United States, and believing that the coun-try had the right to demand of such their services for the public good, and that they had no right to refuse to comply with such a demand, at such a time, many of our citizens were opposed to the nomination of Gen. Cheatham, when our State Convention met in Nashville, in August last. But now, with Mr. Johnson in the field, in opposition to the nominee of the Convention, and taxable for State purposes, and deduct and taxable for State purposes, and deduct the hond. and with a fair and reasonable prospect of from the coupon the tax to which the bond a Democratic defeat and a Radical triumph is satisfied. During the Democratic adminin the November election for Congressman at large from the State, a powerful reaction has taken place, and those who were the most persistent opponents of Gen. Cheat-ham before his nomination, are now his warmest and most steadfast adherents. There was, at one time, a widespread dispo-sition upon the part of the people of this county, to oppose a man for no other rea-son than that he was the nominee of a conention, so prevalent was the idea that with conventions were associated corruption, misrepresentation of the popular will, frau is upon the rights of the people, and all the greater and lesser evils with which the body politic is now afflicted. That the popular will has now and then been disregarded in times past by our conventional bodies is a limited state. The insolvent railroad, and alluded to the times past by our conventional bodies is a times past by our conventional bodies is a fact too patent to admit of contradiction and will be questioned by none who are at all familiar with the manner in which they are frequently manipulated and gerrymandered. But then the people can blame no one for this but themselves. They are or should be always present when the primary meetings for the appointment of delegates to conventions are held; and if representative many are not appointed and the sentative men are not appointed, and the since it was founded. From 1855 to 1861 popular expression is not heeded, they it cost an average of $16,000 per year. alone are at fault. Conventions are not From 1865 to 1870 it cost the State $114,000 necessarily frauds upon the rights and pre-rogatives of the people. Politicians, not-withstanding all that has been said and written against them, cannot manage and manipulate the primary meetings and conventions at their own will and pieasure, if the people were vigilant and wide awake to their interests. To concede that a few politicians in the counties can manage and control the primary elections, and to grant the country elections, and to grant the country of the country elections, and to grant the country elections.
